Learning from Buddha Reflection

[Now], introspect about how during the day you should act to become a purely good and compassionate person, a person who benefits the public. “At night, again think back: did I have that kind of mindset and conduct? Are the things I did today truly reflective of the conduct, speech, and mindset of a Bodhisattva at the causal stage?” (Learning from Buddha, p. 6)

Samantabhadra Bodhisattva’s Verse of Exhortation

This day is already done. Now our lives are that much less.

We’re like fish in a shrinking pond.
What joy is there in this?

We should be diligent and
vig-or-ous,

as if our own heads were at stake.

So don’t be lax; stay mindful of im-perm-an-ence.

Dedication of Merit

Let us dedicate the merit of our chanting and praises to living beings everywhere in the six realms of existence and silently to whomever we want to receive special merit:

[Pause]

May we eliminate the three bad karmas of greed, hatred, and ignorance and eliminate all afflictions and defilements.

May we obtain ultimate wisdom and become accomplished.

May all our sins and evil deeds be eliminated.

May all generations practice the Way of the Buddha.
